Quotes for the Week

For me, the single biggest factor in developing the attitude necessary to overcoming hardship was having positive role models. That started with the people I knew who I could look up to and learn from.

Fortunately, I did not have far to look for such inspiration and guidance. I have already noted my mother's influence. She refused to see herself as a victim and determined not to let us think of ourselves that way either.

One of the primary ways she did this was refusing to accept excuses from me or my brother Curtis. That may have been one of the best things she ever did for us. Simply because we knew there would never be an excuse good enough to explain why we had not done some chore or brought home a better report card, we quit giving excuses and figured out how to do what was expected.

We first encounter Hannah when Israel was in desperate need of a great leader and a great man. Hannah became the woman whom God used to help shape that man. Samuel proved to be the one man who could fill the leadership void. His character bore the clear stamp of his mother's influence, even though he left home at such an early age.
