Quotes for the Week

Men no longer believe that there are absolutes, and more and more it has become the accepted thing not to speak the truth. The business contract is not honored if, legally, a way can be found around it. The employer does not honor his promise. The employee responds in kind. As men have turned away from God, who alone gives a basis for absolutes in truth, men have become untruthful and hypocritical with each other. We accept hypocritical language in TV ads, and in medicine when the child, after it has been born, is called the "fetus-ex-utero" so that it can be gotten rid of more easily. We know we are surrounded by the untruthful and hypocritical, but our generation has come to accept it as normal and thus to be manipulated by it.

Schaeffer, F. A. (1982). The complete works of Francis A. Schaeffer: a Christian worldview (Vol. 4, pp. 229–230). Westchester, IL: Crossway Books.

Some people always tell the truth, even if it hurts. And they don't seem to feel any obligation to couch their words in softer language or make any attempt to be tactful. If the dress makes you look fat, they will just come right out and say it. After all, you want the truth, right?

Others tell the truth, but they are conscious of other people's feelings, so they look for a way to speak the truth without slashing, smashing, piercing, or cutting. They try to remain truthful but tactful. They employ language that helps soften the blow. Most of us want to know the truth; but we seldom like to be knocked off our feet with it.

The question becomes, then, how to find the balance. How can we be more like Jesus, who was "full of grace and truth" (John 1:14)? He spoke the truth and he was also gracious. Those are qualities worth emulating.
