Quotes

The neglect of anything for which you have the talent, and to which you have the call, may deprive you of the inward witness. Bear much fruit, so shall ye be his disciples, consciously so. Keep his commandments, so shall you abide in his love and know it. Forget not to be obedient, forget not to be prayerful in retirement, but forget not also that you are meant to shine as a light in this world, that you must work while it is called to-day, that you are not sent into this life merely to enjoy spiritual recreation or even celestial refreshment, but to do a work which no other can do, and for which you must give a personal account.

Spurgeon, C. H. (1998). Spurgeon's Sermons (electronic ed., Vol. 16). Ages Software.

Bear much fruit; so shall ye be My disciples. I beg every reader to consider these words most seriously. Do not be content with the thought of gradually doing a little more or better work. In this way it may never come. Take the words, much fruit, as the promise that your heavenly Vine reveals about what you must and can be. Fully accept the impossibility—the utter folly—of attempting it in your own strength.

Murray, A. (2002). The True Vine. Whitaker House.

You may not love discipline, but you are going to have to live it if you are going to win your race and live the life that glorifies God and blesses others.

Merritt, J. (2020). Character still counts: it is time to restore our lasting values (p. 184). Harvest House Publishers.
