Quotes for the Week

Elisabeth Elliot, whose husband was killed along with four other missionaries in Ecuador, worked laboriously to break down the local language into writing during a time when there were no computers or photocopiers.

Then a suitcase containing two years of work was stolen and she had to start all over from the beginning. When asked if she was angry about the theft, she said, “No, it was my worship to God, and what I did for him was lost to us, but not to God.” She refused to be drawn in by the prevailing belief that you have to be rewarded in this life for all you do; she was not about to trade fleeting success for true significance.

Quotes for the Week Cont'd

John Hus also planted the seeds for the Moravian church that was later led by a man named Ludwig Zinzendorf. It was under his leadership that the Moravians sent 265 missionaries around the world in the eighteenth century. The great English evangelist John Wesley was converted largely because of Moravian influence. And so the impact of Wycliffe, Hus, and those who followed them continued in diverse but memorable ways.
